Employee Benefits for Domestic Partners

The employer offering of domestic partner benefits has become more common over the last decade, with recent studies indicating that as many as 47% of all employers offering health benefits are offering coverage to unmarried domestic partners. While employers retain a wide level of discretion over the details of their health plans, the decision to extend coverage to domestic partners raises several critical issues, including design choices, nuances in group health plan regulations, carrier limitations, and compliance with state and federal tax rules. This webinar will equip employers with the necessary information to successfully administer benefits for domestic partners.

Remote Work Considerations in a COVID-19 Environment

COVID-19 created administrative and compliance challenges never previously contemplated by HR professionals in the United States. One of the most significant areas of change involves employees working remotely due to stay-at-home restrictions, safety precautions and strategic business initiatives. Regardless of the reason, more employees are working remotely than ever before and with those changes in culture comes new compliance-related concerns that must be addressed by HR. Join us to discuss the most common challenges facing businesses in a remote work environment and where we are heading from here.
